Gelind, Gelinde, [V. lind] I. adj. primarily = not hard, soft. Gelinde Haut, Hände, soft skin, hands; gelindes Leder, soft leather; gelindes Fleisch, tender flesh or meat; gelindes Kupfer, soft copper; gelinde [geschmeitig] Metalle, soft metals. Fig. [having a small degree of vehemence or internal strength] Gelinder Hauch, gentle breath; gelinde Aussprache eines Buchstabens, soft pronunciation of a letter; ein gelinder Wind, Regen, a gentle wind or gale, rain; das Wetter ist gelind gewesen, the weather has been mild; gelinder Frost, slight frost; gelinde Hitze, a moderate heat; gelindes Feuer, small or gentle fire; gelinde Arznei, a mild medicine or physic; ein gelinder Schmerz, a slight pain; gelinde Sitten, soft or gentle manners; fig. * gelinde Saiten aufziehen, to give fair words, to be submissive; sich des gelindesten Ausdrucks bedienen, to make use of, to use the mildest term; Einen mit gelinden Worten befänstigen, to appease any one with fair or civil words; er ist zu gelind gegen seine Kinder, he is too indulgent to his children; er versuchte erst die gelindesten Mittel, he first tried the fairest means; ein gelinder Verweis, eine gelinde Strafe, a mild or gentle reproof, a slight punishment; sie leben unter einer gelinden Regierung, they live under a mild or gentle government. II. adv. softly, gently, mildly. Es regnet gelind, it rains gently; gelind anrühren, to touch softly or gently; Einen gelind behandeln, to treat any one mildly, indulgently; einen Buchstaben gelind aussprechen, to soften the pronunciation of a letter. Syn. Gelinder, Sanft, Sacht, Leise, Gemach, Glimpflich. In the words gelinde, sanft, sacht, leise the effect denoted, is a slight touch or contact; in gemach, a slight movement. Gemach gehen, signifies not to hurry. Gelinde and Sacht affects the feelings, das Leise, the hearing. Das Gelinde, from the slightness of the contact, gives merely no painful, or a less painful sensation; das Sacht produces at the same time an agreeable one. Thus, figuratively, one would not say, gelinde, but sanfte Liebesungen, for it is intended they should be agreeable; on the other hand, one would say, gelinde Strafen, of such are not intended to be too severe. Glimpflich implies more especially humanity and kindness.

Gelingen, [either allied to gelangen or Glück] v. intr. [u. w. seyn] to succeed, to prosper, to speed. Sein Plan, sein Vorhaben ist nicht gelungen, ist ihm nicht gelungen, his plan, his design did not succeed; Altes, was er unternimmt, gelingt ihm, he prospers or succeeds in all his undertakings, every thing he undertakes thrives with him; es gelingt ihm nicht, Werke zu machen, he does not succeed in making verses; es mag ihm — oder fehlgeschlagen, if he succeed or fail; durch die Hilfe Gottes ist es mir gelungen, with the help of God I succeeded; ein gelungenes Unternehen, a successful enterprise; das —, success, successfulness. Syn. Gelingen, Gerathen, Einschlagen, Gelingen. When exterior circumstances produce a prosperous termination, or chance favours the accomplishment of what is attempted or intended, we use glücklich. When, on the contrary, the success of an undertaking proceeds from the judicious choice of the means, or depends upon our own skill or prudence, we use gelingen. Gerathen and einschlagen are said of the thing or work itself, gelingen principally of the means employed. Einschlagen implies a greater degree of certainty in the issue, a greater effect of chance than gerathen. A painter may say: dieses Gemälde ist mir wohl gerathen, but not: es ist gut eingeschlagen.

Ein — er Geist, a wandering, rambling, unsettled mind; er ist —, in im Kopfe, he is crack-brained, out of his wits, distracted; — reden, to talk wildly, to rave. SYN. Irr, Unsinnig, Sinnlos, Verückt, Watastanzig, Wahnsinnig. Irr is used of one whose ideas, during a state of illness, are void of any inward connexion among themselves. Unsinnig and Sinnlos indicate a deprivation of the use of the understanding and senses occasioned by any violent passion; in the Unsinnigen, however, this bereavement begins with the understanding, whence it spreads its baneful effects over the senses; with the Sinnlosen it at once stuns the senses, and thereby arrests the functions of the understanding. A person may become sinnlos from a violent blow on the head arising from the shock communicated to the organs of consciousness. Unsinnigkeit, Verücktheit, Wahnsinn and Wahnsinnig are distinguished from each other by their duration. The Unsinnige finds himself in a transitory state which vanishes with its short-lived cause, whereas the condition of the Wahnsinnigen and Wahnsinnigen is permanent. The Verückte is distinguished from the Wahnsinnigen and Wahnsinnigen in this, that he lives in a continual waking dream. Wahnsinn implies the entire bereavement of the use of the understanding, in which a man takes that to be really true which he merely imagines. Wahnsinnig manifests itself by a profusion of ideas; but as they are unconnected and confused, they are often absurd. The Wahnsinnige is talkative, his ideas are extremely mutable; the Wahnsinnige will often continue quiet, and apparently void of thought.

Irrführer, m. [-s, pl. -] bad guide; it. deceiver, seducer.

Irr, f. [pl. -n] 1) the state of having lost one's way, aberration, wandering, mistaken way. Jungfer*, Jungfrau, Dirne, Magd, Mädchen. Dirne (originally any young female) is used at present only among the lowest class, unconditionally, for an unmarried female. Those who at all belong to any higher rank join an accessory notion of contempt with it. It differs from Jungfer and Jungfrau, as well with reference to age, as to the preservation of chastity. Jungfer and Jungfrau are unmarried females of any age, Dirne a young person only; the former are such as have preserved their innocence unsullied, the latter any young female. For Dirne we now use Mädchen (dimin. of Magd, which formerly signified, in general, a young female) which is distinguished from Jungfer (in a higher style Jungfrau) by indicating, in the first place, the sex, and consequently stands in contradistinction to Mädchen (boy), as in Mädchenschule; and secondly unmarried females, without reference to chastity, who are still in the bloom of youth. There are old and young Jungfern. Jungfer is become a sort of title for the daughters of the middling class of citizens (whilst those of the higher class are called Fräulein), as also for respectable unmarried female servants. Magd implies a servant maid of the lowest class.

Kalbauenen, pl. [seems to be allied to the Gr. χολός and to be reduced to hō hō, Gr. χολός] intestines, entrails, tripe, garbage. Syn. Kalbauenen, Eingeweide, Gedärme, Getriebe. Kalbauenen [related to the Gr. χολός] is used only of slaughtered animals and in culinary language; Eingeweide, on the contrary is said likewise of men. The Roman haruspices inspected the Eingeweide, not the Kalbauenen, of the beasts sacrificed. Kalbauenen is nearly related to Gedärme; for both signify the same parts of the animal body; the former, however, only in so far as they are prepared for food. Hence the Gedärme of fish and birds are not called Kalbauenen, but Gedärme or Eingeweide. In scientific language Getriebe is distinguished from Eingeweide and Gedärme as signifying properly only the mesentery, or fatty wrinkled skin in the middle of the Gedärme; whereas Eingeweide signify all the inner parts of the animal body, and Gedärme the canals containing the Getriebe.

—, V. Kastetung. Syn. Kasteten, Büchti-gen. A father büchtigt his child, a schoolmaster his perverse pupil; the repentant devotee kastet [mortifies] himself with fastings and by wearing a hair-shirt next his skin. Büchtigungen are reasonable when suited to the offence, to the age, sex and moral condition and character of the person chastised.
Kastetungen are, with regard to their aim, absurd and superstitious; in their execution often cruel, and in some cases, opposed to the end they have in view.

Kastetung, f. [pl. -en] mortification, maceration [of the flesh].

Der — or Staats —, the politic body, the body politic; der gesetzgebende —, the legislative body; die Kirche ist ein —, deren Oberhaupt Christus ist, the church is a body, the head of which is Christ. Syn. Körper, Leib. Körper implies the body of men and animals as consisting of matter; Leib in so far as it is animated. Leib therefore is the opposite to soul, Körper to life. As soon as the human body ceases to be a fitting instrument for sensation and motion, it is no longer a Leib; it continues, however, a Körper, and a human one, as being endowed with its form. The anatomist has Körper on his dissecting-table, but no Leib.

It implies not merely that with which we appease our hunger, but also that which, according to our circumstances, we are accustomed to enjoy. He who undertakes to furnish another with Köst, binds himself to more than he who undertakes to give him Speisen. Nahrung is that which any one requires for his support while abroad, or on a journey. V. Geheiß.

Köstfrau, f. mistress of a boarding-house.

—frei, adj. and adv. enjoying free board, that is, without expense. Er ist —frei, muß sich aber die Kleider selbst anschaffen, he pays nothing for his board, but must find himself in clothes; Einen —frei halten, to defray any one's expenses. —gänger, m., —gängerin, f. boarder. —gänger, —gängerinnen halten, to keep a boarding-house. —gelt, n. money paid for board. Er bezahlt wöchentlich zwei Thaler —gelt, he pays two dollars a week for board, or he boards for two dollars a week; seinen Bedienten —gelt geben, to give one's servants board-wages. —halter, m., —halterin, f. a person who keeps a boarding-house. —haus, n. boarding-house. —herr, m. master of a boarding-house. —jungfer, f. a young woman boarding at any place, boarder. —traut, n. 1) the wall hawk-weed. 2) the hawk-weed picris or yellow succory. 3) spear-mint. —schule, f. boarding-school. —schüler, m., —schülerin, f. boarder. —verächter, m., —verächterin, f. [in fam. lang.] a nice, squeamish or dainty person. Er ist kein —verächter, he is not nice in his diet, also fig. in his fleshly desires. —verständlich, adj. and adv. able to appreciate or to dress nice or dainty victuals. —wurz, f. bear's wort.

Köstbar, adj. and adv. 1) [= kostspielig] expensive, costly. Das Bauen ist —, building is expensive; in Paris ist es —guleben, it is dear or expensive living at Paris. 2) valuable, precious. —Steine, precious stones; Einen —bewirthen, to entertain any one splendidly or sumptuously; —e Möbeln, costly furniture; das schmeckt — [in popular lang.] that has an excellent or delicious taste or flavour, that is delicious. Syn. Kostbar, Kostlich, Kostspielig. Köstlich is used with reference to the intrinsic value of a thing, köstbar in so far as this value is expressed by a high price. Dishes which gratify the palate in a high degree are köstlich; they are also frequently köstbar. The difference between köstbar and kostspielig is, that the former implies Kosten, or expense, in general, the latter much and frequent expense. A building can be both köstbar and kostspielig; a lawsuit only kostspielig.

Köstbarkeit, f. 1) preciousness. 2) a precious or valuable thing. —en, trinkets, jewels.

|| Kradig, adj. and adv. full of caverns, cavernous.

Kraft, f. [pl. Kräfte] [seems to be allied to greifen; Sax. crasian = verlangen] strength, force, power. Thierische —, animal force or strength; anziehende, ausbehnende —, attractive, expansive force; bewegende —, moving power; anstrebende —, centripetal force; abstrebende —, centrifugal force; die Kräfte der Seele, the powers or faculties of the soul or mind; die — der Jugend, the vigour of youth; er ist in seiner vollen —, he is in his full vigour; dieser alte Mann hat noch Kräfte, that old man has still some vigour; neue Kräfte bekommen, to gather new strength, to recover one's strength; aus allen Kräften schreien, rufen &c., to cry as loud as one can, to row with might and main; das übersteigt, geht über meine Kräfte, that is above or beyond my strength; die Kräfte dieses Staates sind erschöpft, the resources of that state are exhausted; dieser Wein hat keine —, this wine has no strength, is flat; eine Bräse, die keine — hat, an unsavoury or insipid sauce; diese Speisen geben —, Kräfte, these victuals are very nourishing, nutritious or strengthening; die — einer Arznei, the virtue of a medicine; die Kräfte der Pflanzen, the virtues of plants; die — des Magneten, die magnetische —, the magnetic power. Fig. Die beste — eines Dinges, der Gatt und die — eines Dinges, the quintessence of a thing, matter or substance; er sprach mit vieler —, he spoke with great force, vigour or energy; die — der Wahrheit, the force or power of truth; die — des Kolorkits [in painting], the strength of colouring; der innern — nach [intensiv], intensively; ein Urtheil in — setzen, to execute a sentence; — meines Amtes, by virtue of my office; — des Vertrages, as has been stipulated; [in] — meines Versprechens, in virtue of my promise. Srw. Kraft, Vermögen, Stärke. Kraft actually produces the effect; Vermögen is capable of producing it. Kraft is active and operative; Vermögen can become so. Stärke is a determinate, and more especially, a higher degree of Kraft. Stark is the opposite to schwach or weak; Stärke to Schwachheit. A child, even, has a certain Kraft, otherwise it could do nothing; but it has as yet no Stärke.

Kraft-anstrengung, f. effort. Eine letzte —anstrengung machen, to make a last effort —arznei, f. a corroborative medicine, a corroborant, a corroborative; it. a powerful or efficacious medicine. —aufwand, m. employment or exertion of force or strength. Ein —loser Vertrag, an invalid contract; —los machen, to invalidate, to annul. Syn. Kraftlos, unfähig, schwach. A thing is unfähig when it fails to produce an effect, whatever may be the cause of the inefficiency; kraftlos and schwach, when the cause is want of force [Kraft]. Kraftlos and schwach are used as well with reference to living as to inanimate objects; unfähig is said only of the latter. A thing may be unfähig for any one, and yet not be kraftlos. The kraftvollste speech will be kraftlos for one who does not attentively listen to it. The opposite to schwach is stark, as having a higher degree of force. The Schwache has no great degree of strength, but the Kraftlose has none at all. Any whole is called schwach from the fewness of its parts, and stark from their multiplicity. The whole may, therefore, be schwach though each single part is stark. An army when composed of but few men is schwach; kraftlos when exhausted by long marches and fatigue. —losigkeit, f. 1) feebleness, weakness, debility, languor. Eine tödtliche —losigkeit fühlen, to feel a deadly languor. Fig. want of energy, weakness. 2) invalidity. —mann, m. 1) a man of great energy. 2) and dim. —männchen, || —männlein, n. V. Ungefund, Unpaß, Krankhaft, Ungefund [bodily] signifies, in general, every defect in health, including the smallest perceptible degree, and such as is unattended with any considerable pain or debility.
One whose humours are in a morbid state, and who is subject to eruptions, is ungefund without being on that account kranf. Kranf is said of one who suffers from some particular and determinate disorder.
Stroh indicates the absence of health in a higher degree, by which it is distinguished from ungefund; but it is said of such whose ailments are not among those enumerated by the nosologist, but which are characterized by their own peculiar marks, crises &c.; in this it is distinguished from kranf. Unpaß, or unpäßlich, is said of one who, without being kranf, is not altogether quite well. Kranflich implies the being subject to various attacks from which kranf- heiten may easily arise. Krankhaft means such a condition as has some resemblance to a really kranf- ten state. We do not say a kranfhafter man, but a kranfhafter pulse.
